Biographie de l'auteur Born in 1968, I discovered fishing shortly after walking, a boon considering I lived in South Florida. After a brief move to Kentucky, my family trekked back to the Sunshine State. It was at this time that I made the first of my Big Career Changes, breaking from my daily fishing habit to play the saxophone in middle school. I took this leap of faith under advisement from my Consigliere/ Grandfather, who assured me that this was the way to impress girls. In a rare occurrence, he was wrong. This isn't surprising considering he had been a Big Band leader in the 1930s, which, I have since learned, was a certainty for impressing girls. Middle School saxophone played by a cherubic pre-teen? Not so much. I had the good fortune to attend high school in idyllic Upstate New York, where I learned the meaning of winter-- and how to seize the whole of summer. After two or three failed attempts at college, I bought a bar. That was fun, because I love beer, but then I eventually met someone smarter than me (a common event) and in this case, she married me and convinced me to go back to school. --Which I did, with enthusiasm. I earned a Masters Degree in History and rediscovered my love for writing. I had written for most of my life, but it was only fatherhood and a herd of dogs/cats/etc. that gave me the time management skills necessary to finish a novel and actually see several more in my future. I live near Nashville, Tennessee with the aforementioned wife, son, and herd, and when I'm not writing, I teach history, grow wildly enthusiastic tomato plants, and restore my 1967 Mustang.
